

Editorial Team Leader – Health Interactions (part of the Nucleus Group)

Exciting opportunity for an experienced and motivated medical communications professional to take a leadership role within a dynamic, market-leading agency

The Editorial Team Leader will lead a team of experienced medical writers and editors to develop and deliver innovative medical communications projects for leading international pharmaceutical clients. Utilising broad therapy-area expertise, commercial awareness and excellent leadership skills, the Editorial Team Leader will work in partnership with Client Services colleagues to manage and develop key accounts within the agency.

The role

- Lead a medical writing team in the delivery of high-quality medical communications projects
- Provide therapeutic-area consultancy advice in areas of expertise for clients and within Health Interactions
- Ensure all deliverables are completed on schedule and within budget to meet or exceed client expectations, with a focus on scientific excellence
- Propose innovative medical communications activities to support account development and/or new business activities
- Management responsibility for medical writing team, including long-term resource planning, staff development and training, performance management and succession planning
- Develop and maintain effective relationships with clients, external faculty and key internal contacts
- Ensure optimal processes are utilised for efficient delivery and compliance with relevant international and national regulations and guidelines
- Manage the development and delivery of publication plans in conjunction with internal colleagues and multidisciplinary client teams

The candidate

- A strong life sciences background to BSc, MSc or PhD is essential
- Several years' experience in a communications agency or similar, encompassing a broad range of medical communications deliverables and therapeutic areas
- Proven leadership experience and influencing skills in a multidisciplinary environment
- Experience of managing and developing a medical writing team
- Well-developed scientific writing skills for different target audiences, ideally to Principal Medical Writer level
- Excellent organisational and project management skills
- Full understanding of industry regulations and guidelines underpinning medical communications activities
- Extensive experience of designing and delivering publication plans, ideally including a franchise-wide scope
- Experience in multidisciplinary teamwork within a client publications team, including leading publications team meetings
- Thorough understanding of regulations affecting publication plan development and implementation

The successful candidate will have an opportunity to work at the cutting edge of science in an agency that prides itself on offering a supportive team-oriented working environment and outstanding opportunities for personal career development.

Health Interactions is founded on the principle that good communication results from considered interaction. Our team members interact at all stages of development to create comprehensive, coordinated and targeted messages with impact. Whatever the audience, we tailor the perfect formula for our client's healthcare communications.

To apply please contact Jane Rattray on 0207 398 0575 or email a copy of your CV to jane.rattray@nucleuscentral.com.